Do it as soon as possible!As Apple celebrates the 50th anniversary of the iPhone, here's a look at Apple's history with the iconic product. From the first paper prototype to the announcement of the iPhone, Apple has changed the world in the four decades of its existence. But the journey wasn't always smooth. Throughout its history, Apple had to overcome many challenges, develop new features and juggle seemingly endless numbers to launch a product on time and on budget. Here's a look at the major milestones and some of the challenges Apple has faced along the way: 1) The first Apple computers were programmed by hand. After a few rounds of design and testing, the original Macintosh shipped in January 1984, and it was the first computer ever made with a mouse. Three years later, Apple launched the Lisa, a $2,495 desktop with Windows 3.0 software, a 400 MHz Motorola 68000 processor and 1 MB of RAM — a huge leap over the original Macintosh's 64 KB of RAM. The Lisa was praised for its GUI and the inclusion of a mouse, but it was ill-received by
