For some people this is the primary art form of design, with the end result being a finished product. For others, it is more of a necessary evil, something required to make a project deadline. It's a gateway into the world of design. I believe that the more you practice your craft, the better artist you will become. I have had the opportunity to learn how to write with a pencil and pen, how to sculpt in clay, how to draw and paint on paper, and how to draw digitally. Later, I learned how to sculpt, paint, and draw digitally. Along the way I learned many things that would never come up in any type of studio course I ever took. The most valuable thing I learned was to never be a slave to my tools. I'm not a professional artist, but my skills have improved so much over the years that it surprises me that I have come so far. Practice is the key to craftsmanship. Even if you're just working on paper, practicing is a good way to learn; it gives you something tangible you can do and trace. Just because it doesn't look like what you see in the magazines or on the TV, it's the closest you can get to the professional look without the expense or commitment to being an artist. There is more to craft than just learning how to use your tools; it's practicing with them. Aspiring artists create things without a mind-set to finish something. They are just there to learn and explore. I, as a professional artist, need to learn to see a project through all the way to the final. I practice until that happens, then I push myself to be more efficient with the design, page layouts, and so on. Otherwise, I become comfortable with doing things the hard way. The results of finishing a project are the most important. What you create for your business, friends, family, or for yourself is the most important. If you aren't in love with what you create, it's not going to sell. Keep in mind that the tools are not important, but the art behind the tools is. These tools are simply a means to an

The professional version has lots of cool features and Photoshop Elements has fewer features. What's in a name? There have been some funny Photoshop Moments that can confuse people. So, how about a Photoshop Award? Let's start with making sense of the name. PS - Photoshop The "PS" stands for PhotoShop and Photoshop Elements. It is an alternative to traditional Photoshop. PSE - Photoshop Elements This stands for PhotoShop Elements. Elements stood for the first version of PhotoShop. The developer of PhotoShop was attempting to translate it into other languages. You may have heard that it was a French word. However, they were not able to translate it because there is a word in English that sounds similar. PhotoShop is "Photogramme" in French. This gives you the clue. PSE is short for PhotoShop Elements and "elements" are the "photogrammes" of the software. PSE - PhotoShop Elements. PhotoShop - PhotoShop. Similar name, different meaning. In a previous version, these were called PhotoWare and PhotoPlus. These two names are not used anymore. PhotoShop and PhotoShop Elements When you hear "Photoshop" or "Photoshopped", you probably think of the professional version of this program. There are lots of Photoshop Gurus who swear by this version. But, to be honest, it is not the best tool for the photo editing job. It's not bad. It is just different. If you are looking for a simple graphics editor for photo editing, then this should be your "go to" program. If you do a lot of photo editing, You are not going to get the same quality of result from this as the professional version. However, there are a lot of professionals who do not edit photos very often. The professional version does a lot more than just photo editing. When you use the software for photo editing, you may lose some features. These features are not important to you. As long as you get the job done. For example, the professional version of this software can open 32-bit and 64-bit files.

Q: Combining HTTP & SSH protocols: Is it better to use GZIP or SSH compression? Is it better to use gzip compression to stream data using HTTP or SSH (probably SSH v1) and why? Is it better to use SSH compression over TCP port 22 (the default for SSH) instead of HTTP compression? Why?
A: On the whole, FTP compression is not an effective use of bandwidth. HTTP compression by itself is not an effective use of bandwidth either. Keep in mind that web browsers are really "sucking in" a lot of information in order to display images, HTML and ads in a webpage, and you're compressing HTTP headers. And consider, among other things, that: HTTP compression is not effective for long streams of data. HTTP does not preserve the "timino" aspect of a stream, so it's most effective for small amounts of data in a bursty fashion (eg. tweets, or web pages from which a block of text is extracted, not a continuous flow of images). HTTP compresses only http headers, and doesn't care about the content (ie. it's not designed to send the entire contents of a stream for no reason, like FTP does). That said, for Http, I'd suggest Only send http headers (as the RFC specifies) as a first-class thing. Send gzip encoded http headers as the result of such Send data as tiny chunks Use it just for http communication, and anything else as SSH (or another compatible protocol). If you use this, it will probably be more effective than using http as a "protocol" for any other purpose, or FTP for other purposes. On the other hand, I'd suggest Not using SSH over TCP port 22. Use SSH over other, uncompressed ports such as tcp/2280 or tcp/5070 if you use SSH for anything else, use encrypted protocols such as sftp or scp, and even then, only use it to transport bits, and not data.
A: One thing you should know about HTTP is that it is designed to be replayed over multiple instances (such as when connected to multiple sites), meaning that repeated headers are forwarded. HTTP compression is sent on the headers (not on the data itself), making HTTP the better choice as long as you don't have to send multiple instances. FTP doesn't.

Home » Latest News JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 29 (Xinhua) -- The South African rand dropped to its lowest in weeks after the resignation of former president Jacob Zuma in a financial scandal that could end his tenure. The South African currency, which had been slightly higher in recent days, opened down at 8.07 a dollar on Aug. 29 on the interbank market, losing 0.39 U.S. cents to 8.20, after a 10 percent stake in mining firm Gauteng North and senior officials in the ruling African National Congress party announced Zuma's resignation last night. The rand is trading near a five-month low, with international investors jittery about the South African economy, the subject of more than 20 corruption scandals and Zuma's fate. A Rand Daily News poll released on Tuesday showed that more than half of the more than 4,000 voters surveyed said Zuma's exit would have no impact on the economy. "I am confident that President Zuma will be able to deal with the 'resignation' of the ANC and his departure as the President of the Republic," declared Motlafela Mathebula, an ANC member and resident of KwaZulu-Natal province, according to the poll. Mathebula said she was not concerned about Zuma's leadership. "The ANC faces no challenge of a leadership and the ANC is still intact. President Zuma must resign for others to take over his administration." Zuma, who has been accused of raping an aide and harassing several others, left the post of president at 12:01 a.m. (0801 GMT) on Tuesday. His resignation was followed by ANC secretary general Gwede Mantashe. The party appointed Cyril Ramaphosa, the one-time chief-of-staff of Zuma, to succeed the former president. The ANC is now in the last year of an interim leadership transition. The rand closed at 8.20 a dollar on Wednesday, down 0.40 U.S. cent, or 4.2 percent. The local currency closed 0.74 percent lower to 13.094/14.072/2 against the U.S. dollar/euro/pound. The South African financial market is closed for a public holiday this week for the Aug. 11 commemoration of the end of apartheid.Joseph C. Wein
