The study included subjects who were asked to wear headphones and listen to either normal speech or speech distorted by a computer. Afterwards, they were asked to reproduce the voices. In one experiment, the subjects were given a 3-minute training period to learn and adapt to the distorted speech. The results showed that learning through one's own mistakes was even more effective than learning from an instructor. Errorful learning is not just about repetition, just like repetition is not the only way to master a skill. In fact, studies have shown that sometimes intentionally putting mistakes into a learning process can actually increase the results. According to the study, this is because the user can see in their own mistakes how they struggle to understand something and to do something right. This leads to internalizing and memorizing these mistakes for future use. This is in contrast to learning from an instructor, which results in a higher memorization of the skills when recalling the learned content. Because of the success in the study, the researchers plan to continue testing this on other subjects in the future to see if this applies to other people. What's new in Alan's Automaton Workshop:

: Season 2 ~ Maybe it could happen. But it would cost effort, money, patience and (hmmmm…maybe a sacrifice?)…but we have all that in abundance right now. First things first: I would like to personally thank everyone who has supported us so far. We are humbled, we are amazed and we are grateful to those of you who have told your friends/family/relatives who you felt might enjoy the show. I'm also grateful for those who have told their friends/family/relatives to tell their friends/family/relatives to tell their friends/family/relatives to tell their friends/family/relatives who might like the show. It's been working wonderfully so far :) Now here's the thing. We're pretty new to this whole "letting people see our stuff" thing. It's taken every bit of effort we have, but we're making progress everyday. And it's cost us a good amount of money. ~ Especially the past few weeks. ~ But we will walk away from it all knowing that it is worth it. Finally, here's what I mean by "believe". I'm ready to announce that, just as every single script we have in process right now, believe it or not, we're listening. We would deeply appreciate any prayers or prayers of love we could get. I've referred you to prayer ideas which we've had a lot of success with. Should you prefer not to think about giving us your mind, that's the way we'd prefer it. Thank You for your prayers. It's really making the show possible. And the best part of that is that I, and all of us on the show, can hear it more clearly. It could happen in our dreams. But it would probably take a bit longer than that. It's a question of pleasing to Gods, a question of cost-efficiency. Right now there's just a few things we'd probably need to have in place. If we were to get an order in, it would be next year. So, if you really want it to happen and you're willing to follow, tell all the people you know. Tell your friends/family/relatives…

- 2D, procedural landscape generated from pre-defined settings - 2D visuals with platforming elements - Design and development of an original environment featuring procedurally generated scenery and sounds - Interactive puzzle solving as the only way to express yourself 50 FPS 🎮🎮🎮🎮 My first VR experience was Jumper VR on the Oculus Rift in 2015 and it was such an amazing experience that I instantly became a huge fan of VR. Since then I have been eagerly awaiting more VR experiences that are not just tedious shooters and I got a bit upset when I had to wait nearly 2 years for this game to drop. This game is an early attempt at VR storytelling and is by far my favourite VR game of the year. Unlike the majority of VR games, this game takes a creative and immersive approach. The game follows a walking survivor through a haunting, surreal and mysterious world telling a story of solitude and isolation in the wake of a devastating event. This game has an intense atmosphere and is very cinematic in its approach to storytelling. The developers have created a truly immersive VR experience that is immersing and extremely emotional. Although the player does not interact with objects, in fact objects are frequently needed to solve certain puzzles, they are never real objects or realistic things that you might encounter in the real world. This is one of the best VR games you are going to play this year and it is the closest thing to sci-fi you will get from the medium of VR. 50 FPS 🎮🎮🎮🎮 Please take a few minutes to read the text at the beginning of the game to understand it better: Walking through the woods with Jake, you notice that something is different. The leaves seem too thick, the trees too close together and the ground is not really solid. It's starting to rain... Once you find shelter, you notice that Jake is now shaking and he seems very scared. You start to wonder how he ended up in this place. A few hours later, Jake dies in your arms and you start looking for clues as to what happened. The path goes straight through the forest and continues for quite some time. You come to a cliff and notice something odd: a thin white line spanning a few metres. You follow the path
