Also, I'm thinking of co-operatively producing a game in the fantasy genre, with a strong JRPG vibe. I'm not sure what it will be about (think of Dungeon Fighter Online, with that type of genre), but the plan is for a game that will encompass even more countries (just as SRPGs are more country-oriented). I'm thinking the genre will be more elaborate than SRPGs, with events and characters representing each country. If you're interested or have any comments or opinions, you can contact me at tomoyasu.maruyama@gmail.com. I'm hoping to have the beta out in around June/July.

I just finalized what my plan for MY HERO ACADEMIA will be, so here's a quick outline and background info.

The hero and heroine earn experience while doing their daily rituals. At a certain point, it becomes possible to increase experience via "effort" by engaging in battles. The character's experience determines how effective his or her offense becomes.

As the characters level up they can obtain new skills, character items, and experience points. Character items are items that you can customize, and are the main source of customization in the game. Character items are divided in 4 main categories: Skill Cores, weapons, armor, items, effects, extra EXP, and other.

Effort =

GMTHello, i'm working on a game project of my own. I've come to a point where i have to fight for inspiration, and i'm wondering what you guys think should be my next step. I have sort of a funny skeleton idea going, which i've seen many times before. But i'm utterly lost the concept, the actual 'gameplay'. I have made a detailed concept design so you can take a look for yourself, you can see what i have in mind. Please take a look at the concept and give me some advice what would be the right way to go, without ruining the original concept if possible. My goal is to make this happen, i only need some advice, and the most preferably some concrete answers from you guys
