"All previous FIFA titles have been affected by the introduction of new technologies," said Craig "Slam" Leitch, FIFA 20 gameplay director. "As far as I can see, FIFA 23 will also be affected, however, this is where we can utilise motion capture technology in a more intelligent way, by increasing the player's intelligence and using that information to make the player more engaging to play. The development team have already been experimenting with this concept and the results have been hugely positive. We're very excited about what's to come." Below are excerpts from a press release issued by Electronic Arts: FIFA® 23 ROOTED IN REAL WORLD DATA SPOTTED: A number of highly technical players were spotted playing matches during the period as the team developed FIFA® 23... HYPERMOTION TECHNOLOGY: This is what is known as "HyperMotion Technology," a system that analyses movements in real-time and records data to make the player more intelligent and reactive to opponents. Developed in collaboration with the Impens Motion Analysis team, HyperMotion captures the essence of the player's movement to change their ability in FIFA. It even "learns" by examining the players' previous games, so that from then on, every player will have an increased awareness of his/her opponents and make smarter decisions while playing. 20M+ DRAWN: The athlete's movements made it onto a Life Size representation on a projector screen that was 2 meters wide by 3 meters high. 3M+ LED SCREEN: A 120 inch LED screen in the centre of the room was used to allow the athletes to watch themselves back on a life-size replay while they were playing against the computer in the real world. TODD "SPARTAN" CAIN: "When we started on the development of the next generation of FIFA, we decided to put together a unique team of top sport scientists. This team included Dr. Guillaume Louveau, who was formerly head of the system and neuroscience team at Adidas Advanced Sport Technology, where he helped design the material used in the adidas miCoach Sensor, and Dr. Mike Slepon, who previously worked on the Hawkeye 3D system from the University of Oxford. As part of this collaboration between SportsCity and EA
