Hang Up Crack +

In a mad rush to save the world, you get in your car to take a weekend drive to your friend's place. The journey starts out idyllically - until the car crashes into a ditch. Drenched in mud and with your body covered in bruises you wake up in the back seat of the crashed car. You just can't remember the last 15 minutes of your life. Not a good start to a weekend. You have to escape the car. To do so you need to come up with a plan. Who else knows you are inside the car? Could it be the resident on the farm who let you borrow his tractor? Is the owner of the car repairing the engine and charging you for his services? Can he be trusted? Can your friends help? Will they even have time to help you? You are a passenger in a car. You should probably know your way around the car. But what if you have just been dumped and don't have a clue how to get back on the road? Do you have to find your own way to safety? What's new in Hang Up:

"Hang Up" is a song recorded by Canadian rapper Drake for his seventh studio album, More Life (2016). Drake co-wrote the track with Noah "40" Shebib, Kazeem Biddin, Yo-Landi and Ronald "Benzino" Kitaj, with production by the team Cookie Moxie, ifh and Noah Shebib. Released by Freebandz as the fourth single from the album on September 9, 2016, it charted at number fourteen on the US Billboard Hot 100, becoming Drake's tenth top fifteen single from the chart and his first in three years. It is the eighth-most-added song on American radio over the course of the first three days of January 2017, with 109 million streams as of January 5, 2017, according to figures from Nielsen Music. In the United Kingdom, "Hang Up" peaked at number seven on the UK Singles Chart, becoming Drake's tenth top ten single. An R&B, hip hop and pop song, the track sees Drake express his discontent with his current romantic and professional situation. Drake's upcoming release, the sixth studio album Views (2016), was expected to be released after "Hang Up" went on sale and helped the Toronto rapper reach multi-platinum status. According to Drake, "Hang Up" is inspired by the 2003 death of his mother and its beginning parallels the incident. The official remix features Migos, which the latter were angry with the rapper's decision to feature them. It is the last song in the More Life album cycle, and has since been heavily sampled by many other artists. Drake directed a music video for the song. The music video was officially released on the day of the song's release and directed by Andy Hildebrand. Musically, "Hang Up" is a hardcore soul sample with a hip hop beat sampled from the song "Crying" (1976) by the Canadian band Martha and the Vandellas and an R&B groove. Critics have noted the track's similarities to the work of American multi-platinum record producer Rick James. Lyrically, Drake opens with a despondent vision of a life in decline. He sings of disrespect towards his partner that has been tumbling on for too long, urges her to leave him and concludes that their problems have not been solved. Commercially, the song became Drake's highest-charting single in the United States since the release of "Back to Back"
