Q: Can I pass attributes to a partial that uses the same action or method? I'm trying to create a partial, simply like this: 'dogs/form', :locals => { :dogs => @dog } %> For @dog (and many other values I want to pass in that partial). I can't just add a :dog_attributes option to my partial, because the action doesn't automatically return that option. I can include it, of course, but if there is a better way, I'd love to know. A: You are right on the fact that the :locals hash in the partial won't take any attribute as you can see in the source code of a partially rendered page : # of class: ActionView::Base self.render ':action', :status => :unprocessable_entity, :locals => {:errors => [errors]} # of controller render :action => :update, :status => :unprocessable_entity, :conversation_status => :accepted # of view render :action => :update, :status => :unprocessable_entity, :conversation => conversation So all of the selectors in the partial, including the ones passed as a :locals hash, are mapped to locales defined in the controller's view action :

Our packaging is a great way to give your gifts something special for the occasion, and this package makes it easy to do that. Each gift arrives beautifully wrapped in our signature turquoise BoxWave box, complete with a handy 'to-go' box for the long journey ahead. Then you just have to add a gift tag and present - ready to be surprised - that little bit of extra thought you can provide. FUN BOX - MINI GAME 1 x 2 x 1.5 inches (25cm x 30cm x 39cm) Let's be in time for the next big break. To remind him of the joy of an unforgettable day in the surf, grab this Fun Box to a gift. 1. The included cup is strong, though it's not too firm. The shape fits perfectly in your hand and ensures ease of use and secure fit.2. You can choose from five different colors.3. If the kite is under the max wind speed or you have a lot of wind in which case the tail of the kite will come off, the wing will pop out, and the kite will snap into two halves. If the kite snaps into three parts, you have more material left than you think. This is normal.4. If your kite is not going fast enough, the wing will come off. The kite will break at the top if the wing stays put. The middle section (if there is one) will come off. The bottom section will remain in the water. This is normal.5. The EasyControl is a design which integrates a kite leash connector and a leash/cable connector. The air flowing in the kite triangle in this way creates more force compared to conventional kite systems. The Ease Control kite has an integrated center line. At the leading edge an additional line runs towards the kite and the rear edge is reinforced with a special material. These construction materials ensure that your kite is equipped to control the wind speeds. The Ease Control kite can be quickly deployed and may also be unsaddled, so it is ready to fly without additional assembly. Rock & Surf This is a Mini Game baller. Made of quality polyester materials, it is strong and durable. In addition, the handle is with a comfortable grip design. It has a multi-functionality design, with two straps. If you want to take your kite, ball with you, our case

What's new in Island Crusaders:

 It! In addition to providing a variety of new features in the object inspector and code editor, debugger 3.16 adds support for stepping into and out of enum values, examining loops and other C/C++ features in both Windows and GTK+ apps. Hack'n'Run It! debugger 1.2 What has happened since Hacker News update? Here are some quick release highlights.Since Hacker News posting, we added soem basic support for Fortran. Since Hacker news posting, we began to implement support for C/C++, including new understanding of segfaults and aborts. Since the last update, debugger 3.11 has been released, providing bug fixes. Additionally, version 1.3 of the library is now available, allowing direct compilation of plugins. In this section, we'll discuss the C and C++ enhancements in the debugger, some new features, and some UI changes. Debugger Internals When GetDebuggerSettings() is called, the debugger module reads and parses settings from the user's GTK+ configuration file, ~/.gtkrc.xml. Since.gtkrc.xml is a system configuration file, several user-defined debugger settings may be used at once, including a preference for editing text objects, changing the height of the object inspector, etc. When user-defined settings are used, the.gtkrc.xml file is parsed for type names that have "_VAR" appended to them. For example, the "_VAR_VIEW" type refers to an "editor" view displaying properties of a text object. All of these types are registered in the module, and are available to the user interface. User settings can override DIGeDebug and GTK+ console settings (i.e., what debug output is written to the GTK+ console). In debugger 3.16, this is available through the options page (see below). A new dialoge box asks the user if they want to disable DIGeDebug and GTK+ console output. Most settings are applied directly to the "configuration dialog" and do not require that the type name be registered. For example, the _VIEW setting mentioned above is directly applied to the object inspector. Click to see interface sketches. The object inspector has been completely rewritten. It now displays strings, values of user-defined types, text, container items, and array/vector dimensions. The icon of Castle Fight is the first game designed with a secret-crafting system. Players can build a castle by using tetrominoes and move the tetrominoes in the game board to the specific location. However, tetrominoes aren't given in the game board so players must craft tetrominoes in the game board, thus there is a secret-crafting system.HLA and glioma: a meta-analysis and a review of the literature. Immunogenetic factors, such as human leukocyte antigen (HLA) class I and II, may influence the development of human gliomas. The aim of the study was to summarize the available evidence on the relationship between HLA and glioma by meta-analysis. A comprehensive search of English and non-English language articles was performed with relevant keywords and scientific names of investigators. Studies were included if they had sufficient data to extract, if they were written in English, or if they were written in a language for which an English translation was available. The references of retrieved articles were hand searched for additional studies. A total of 15 studies involving a combined total of 1,503 patients with histologically proved gliomas were identified. No overall significant association was found between HLA class I or II antigens and glioma in either univariate or multivariate analyses. In particular, the association with histologic type was not significant. From these results, the authors conclude that HLA class I and II antigens may be involved in the pathogenesis of glioma only in a small percentage of cases. However, more research, particularly to confirm the cross-sectional nature of the association, is warranted.By IANS BHOPAL: Chief Minister Shivraj Singh Chouhan Monday said he will complete the road construction work on the link road between Betul and Shivpuri district in the wake of "political reasons". Chouhan also said the road for past three years is closed and the same cannot be opened now. "I have completed the road in between Betul and Shivpuri. I am left with the road between Betul and Balaghat as it was earlier and that road is left open for 15 days for the summer season. That is why it will take some time to complete the work. Some political reasons are involved in the Congress and the SP (Samajwadi Party). I feel the need to complete the work," he told media here
