For a long time I've been using a single CPU with a /boot partition. Now I'm looking for a setup that is very safe, and can recover if the 1st CPU fails. The server can't have RAID, since it is low-cost. I know I can't use RAID, so how can I set up 4 CPUs? In the /boot I have a separate partition for the OS (linux), and I use it in server mode (no X), so I can choose which CPU do I run. For a long time I used only a single CPU, but now I need to go for 4 CPUs. I hope my system can not fail because of a system issue, but if it does, is it possible to still recover? I have read about the GNU "sparc64" release, and I see that it requires PAE. Does this mean it doesn't support multiple CPUs? Is there any other OS on the market that supports it? I will probably use this OS on the server. From another question I read about the possibility of using 4 CPUs (by running the guests on "ondemand"), but again, is that safe, and will it work if the 1st CPU fails? Can I use 4 CPUs without running the guests on "ondemand"? Please note: I'm not looking for "just put 4 CPUs in, and done" answers. I will definitely set it up (with help) and check if it works. A: Well, as you mentioned, it is extremely unlikely that the failure will be with the system - but the downtime to change parts is bound to be long and painful. Essentially, you will need to setup 4 partitions, and do the following: /boot -- one for linux swap -- one for linux other storage disk -- you can use a format like zfs or btrfs if you want to store a lot of data, or you could just use separate data partitions. Additionally, there is the

Who's driving you through town on the way to the Super Bowl party? Who's buying you your beer, soda, and hot wings? Who's buying you all those electronics? Data from a variety of sources provides some answers about what's going on in America. One of these sources is the Albright Media Group, which does an annual survey that looks at retail spending on consumer products in the U.S. It looks at 80 consumer product categories from nationally-ranked brands to those that are market leaders. The intent is to provide a "back of the envelope" perspective on what's in the market. This year, they've partnered with eMarketer to bring a monthly report on a selected group of American consumers. For 2019, the data is specifically focused on people aged 25 to 34. First, a summary of the "My Shopping Lab" survey. Each respondent was asked to explain how they shopped, with questions like how often they use a comparison website, which website they use most often and which websites they trust more than others. When asked about their shopping behavior, respondents were asked how many times in the past 12 months they'd purchased a product, and then which categories had the highest rates of purchase. For example, in the category of food/drink, an average of 48 people
