I'm trying to install pgadmin4 on Mac OS 10.11.6. pgadmin4 requires that you specify a port number at the command-line. However, the Postgres version it wants to connect to has no port. That and the dialog says it can't use a non-standard port number. I've never used pgadmin4 before. I've just got it installed via Homebrew, and I've already accepted the license. But now I'm lost on what to do, because it seems like I can't use the port it's trying to use. A: Install a PostgreSQL server, and pgadmin4 will connect to it. This example uses the port 8888, as I have pgadmin4 on my own system. You could change that. You can check the version of PostgreSQL you have with psql -V. Q: How to manage highly preferred over longer time ranges? I have an application where a user can pick start and end date and time. He can pick a date/time much in the future. This is no problem to do in our client application (where the user can manually set the date/time of a task). But how to do it in Azure? The server is not in our control. I thought about creating an API call to the application that finds out the best time range. The user can use this API call to set the desired time range. Of Ahmed Musa Was Nigeria's hope, but succumbed to injury after falling on the turf. In a tough display of football, Nigeria went behind in the 17th minute of play at the Emirates Stadium. After the goal, the team was pushed back by Arsenal, and never really threatened the home team. There were plenty of chances in the first half, but the team failed to create and score, ultimately failing to get back in the game. However, the second half was disastrous for Nigeria, with the team in a total malaise. Arsenal scored three goals and won the match 3-1. Africa's 2018 World Cup™ qualifiers are underway and Nigeria and Egypt will play to confirm their qualification to the 2019 African Cup of Nations. After a difficult start of the campaign, Nigeria finally has good news. In football, a win is a win, and Nigeria have managed to win. The team beat Liberia, 1-0, yesterday, while Egypt have already qualified and will play against Ethiopia to confirm their spot at the showpiece in Gabon. The question is: are the Nigerian players starting to gel? "It's obviously positive for us that we've managed to give our fans something to be happy about," said Hakeem Mayekome, who scored his second goal of the match for the Super Eagles after 16 minutes of play. "I think we're happy with the way we played, the way we competed.

Obviously, it was not a usual performance and not a usual game for us, but it's a winning goal for us. "It's a good feeling. It's what we wanted, and we wanted to start on a good note and we're happy to have started the year off with the victory."

Nigeria came close to opening the scoring in the 17th minute when Victor Moses passed the ball to Mayekome, but his shot went wide of the goal. The hosts opened the attack in the 31st minute and Moses had the ball at the center circle of the
