invention relates to a computer of a type having a processor of reduced size and with a central processing unit or microprocessor of a complex structure. A computer of this type is known, for example, from U.S. Pat.
No. 4,643,076, and comprises a processor of reduced size with a central processing unit or microprocessor of the Reduced Instruction Set Computer (RISC) type.

The information processor has a first memory containing a loading program for loading the program of the complex structure microprocessor or microprogram, and a second memory containing a program for controlling the processing operation. In this prior-art embodiment, the microprocessor of reduced size contains the loading program, whose execution time is typically shorter than that of the programs of the complex structure microprocessor. This prior-art computer has the disadvantage that, for
