Do you enjoy telling people what to do? Of course you do! At Metro Warp, the universe's premiere budget transdimensional travel service, you will be placing obstacles and guiding those who are just trying to get to work. Our commuters are some of the most obedient in the business, with mostly voluntary brain chips which enable them to only turn left. Public transit is easy when everyone does the same thing! Metro Warp is a puzzle game about discovering and learning patterns in commuters so that you can get them to the exit. Simply place some obstacles in front of them, and they'll (mostly) willingly turn to the left. Place as many barricades as you want! The only limitations are the shapes of the worlds, and some open service ducts. Featuring: Twisted 3D worlds! 50 transit areas, ranging from easy to challenging. New mechanics to discover People staring at their phones Non-linear progression. Get stuck on one area? Go try another! ## What's new in Fantasy Grounds - Deadlands Reloaded: Hell On Earth Reloaded:

Bringing Out The Best In You Weekend Getaway-Peeke's Run Welcome to Davenport! Thursday, July 2, 2008 Experience Thyself." By David Lynch Few understand life the way David Lynch does. At 74, he's lived in seclusion and created a cinematic world of complex, significant characters, even if they don't exist beyond a sound-stage. His artistic m.o., dreams and blissful ambition are fairly self-evident. (From the beginning to the ending, his work seems to be epic. Even if it's all inside my head.)As for myself, I'm an unassuming creature who's mostly staying at home, saying hello to peonies and pines, reading Mary Oliver's work and throwing like a wild woman in the great outdoors. (Heck, I get my chuckles from golf, hunting, fishing and honest-to-goodness dirt. Sometimes, I am abysmally clean for days with the best of them. I go to my mat and I look up and say, "Darling, I think I'm starting to get it.") Maybe you're me. And if you are, then not only is it possible to understand what David Lynch is about, it's fairly likely that you already do.If you think I'm nuts, you're probably right. Lynch is fascinated by drives and contradictions in human nature. Not only that, but his ideas about dreamscapes and perception fascinate me. When the veil of our everyday senses is lifted, we're enmeshed in our dreams. We then perceive the world differently from other creatures. Those are just a few simple thoughts. I have no idea if they're applicable to humanity. If you do, please enlighten me. It might be fun. First of all, read 1994's Blue Velvet. The "incidental" clues in the book, the title, the radio and radio station and Fredericks's ambiguous blurb: He's trying to sell an experience to you. It's pretty simple. That purchase always comes with money. If you're willing to invest (no pun) in your own dream, it won't be a cheap one. The way things are, you'll have something and someone to show for it. Revelation is everywhere. So too is mystery. The lesson: you can't escape your own self. One can create experiences, but one is at the mercy of experience
