If you use Photoshop, please consider adding "CSS3" to the "Tags" in your toolbar. It will keep many people from accidentally placing a style tag on a layer that you would never normally place a style tag on. You'll be helping people with less experience with Photoshop by putting the clue to the right spot when they do the same thing. * * * Try the legendary `www.photoshop.com/get_digital_tips` to view help pages as well as links to help sites and tutorials of all kinds. Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.5.1) Crack (Updated 2022)

Q: Problem with backslash in regex I am trying to match email from a field that looks like this: @.com I've tried to write this regular expression: \ @\.com but it doesn't seem to work. I have also tried \ @\.com but for some reason it doesn't work with \ @\.com. Any idea why is this happening and how to fix it? A: Use: \ @\.com Quoting your text: \ @\.com The two backslashes are being interpreted as the start of a new character (backslash = escaped character), they are not part of the regular expression. If this "doesn't seem to work" then it must mean that there are other problems with your regular expression. Are you matching your regular expression against your target text? .._work_on_index: ===== Work in the index ===== Over the last couple of years, I have been very busy working on indexing the Greenplum Postgres distribution. This involves working on the migration of the contents of the 'ref:indexdb', and then creating 'ref:indexes'. In this document, we will be discussing how one would go about working on the indexdb. First, I will talk about the underlying motivation of our approach to bringing this indexdb up to scratch and then describe the various steps that are required to migrate the data from the indexdb. Finally, I will discuss some of the issues that need to be taken care of when creating the indexes. Motivation for indexdb migration ----- Most databases provide the ability to build indexes over columns of a table. They can provide a very useful set of operations for a DBMS. Because of this fact, several distributed databases (such as Postgres) provide the ability to build and manage indexes. Unfortunately, there was no standard migration process to transfer the contents of an indexdb into a running version of Postgres. There were two major issues that prevented people from performing this migration task: #. Indexes cannot be dropped in a running version of Postgres and so people were forced to drop their indexdb and
