I have an application with a log file which has been added to the project. Is there a way to get the relative path to this file? My output directory is a directory and my log file is in a subdirectory. I want to store data into this log file whenever my application runs. A: You can use `LogFile.getParent().getPath();` to get the path relative to your project. Q: ng-view not updating with ajax in ui router I'm trying to get the UI-Router up and running. The original state hierarchy is global "section1", "section2", "section3" and then if the user clicks a link called "users" then the URI changes to "users/login" and then I want to load the "main" state ("users/login") on a new "ui-view". Right now I'm using one controller for the "main" view but the ajax is working fine as i'm just trying to get the view to load the page. This is my.config.js
