Q: Trouble with a MemoryStream Currently writing a C# program using a MemoryStream in the format that a file is read in through a binaryReader.ToArray(). Passing the amemory stream to a FileWriter and then out to a device seems to be giving errors that the file is not saved correctly (i think) I am looking for any help here... :(This is my code below. MemoryStream MyStream = new MemoryStream(bytes); BinaryWriter BmpWriter = new BinaryWriter(MyStream); BmpWriter.Write(bytes); File.Flush(); File.Close(); var fs = new FileStream(@"\\.\PhysicalDrive8", FileMode.OpenOrCreate); var b = new BinaryReader(fs); var stream = new byte[b.BaseStream.Length]; b.Read(stream, 0, (int)b.BaseStream.Length); fs.Seek(0, SeekOrigin.Begin); fs.Write(stream, 0, stream.Length); You can see that I am doing a file flush. The problem is that the file does not have a space taken up. When I look at my program using process explorer there has been a file written. When i look at my program using a File System viewer I have an empty file with 0 bytes in it. Has anyone faced this problem before? A: In your code, after the write of the binary bytes, there is a calling of the method "File.Flush()". What I understood is that by calling "File.Flush()" the whole file is written. So, without calling "File.Flush()" the memory stream is not written in your disk. Remove this line "File.Flush()" to write the content of memory stream in the disk. I hope this helps you. File.Flush(); Q: PostgreSQL - How to set default value with
