0.S public void setPointer(int value) { if (mPointer!= value) {
    mPointer = value;
mOnPointerChangeListener.onPointerValueChanged(value); } } public int getPointer() { return mPointer; } } } public interface OnPointerChangeListener { void onPointerValueChanged(int value); } The benefit of the above solution is that you don't need to implement any more methods. But you have to be concerned about possible memory leaks as you are allocating a new array each time the array is resized, hence you have to make sure that you can call mAdapter.notifyDataSetChanged() whenever necessary.
