I am learning about string comparisons in SQL Server. According to MSDN, The following are the operators that compare string data types and strings: equal to () not equal to () greater than (>) greater than or equal to (>=) less than (>) less than or equal to ('Rege' As the example, I think LastName is not a string. But SELECT * FROM Employees WHERE LastName 'Rege' would run fine. My question is: Does LastName is a string? Why? Is SELECT * FROM Employees WHERE LastName 'Rege' a valid statement? A: SQL Server does not store strings as some sort of binary data type in its core structures. Rather it simply counts the number of characters and uses the ASCII value of those characters to determine a distance/string match. An example: DECLARE @foo nvarchar(5) = 'Howdy!' SELECT 1 WHERE @foo 'HO' In this case, the SQL Server engine doesn't actually store the string "HO" at all, it just has a distance of 1 from the original string. This is one reason why it can store a very large number of rows in its hash table (a.k.a. varchar2(n)) - because strings only need to match their lexical length in a given string, the engine only needs to compare a starting pointer and stopping pointer and then compare the characters themselves. Further, it will probably work with a large number of characters, such as a first or last name, etc, because an input will likely not pass over 1,000 characters in any case and therefore any string comparisons above the length of the varchar column will use an ordinal match. The case where @foo 'HO' 6d1f23a050
