I have a Proliant ML110 G5 and was wondering what OS would work best with my hardware? .The human m1 receptor is a G-protein coupled receptor (GPCR) and binds nicotine and $\alpha 4\beta 2$ nicotinic acetylcholine receptor (nAChR) ligands. It is a 14-transmembrane spanning G-protein coupled receptor that is important in CNS (Central Nervous System) development and control. Specifically, it is the high affinity $\alpha 4\beta 2$ ($\alpha 4\beta 2$) nAChR that is targeted by the agonist, acetylcholine and is important in behavioral and cognitive development. The m1 receptor is known to mediate the long term effects of cholinergic signaling and is involved in a number of behaviors related to higher order thinking including attention, working memory, and arousal. The m1 receptor also plays a role in neuropathologies and disorders such as schizophrenia, Parkinson's, and Alzheimer's Disease.Citing a lack of experience and employees, Munn v. Alcorn addressed the "act or practice" prong of a plaintiff's case as it related to the act of pleading separately from the subsequent proof of the claim. The court then created a rebuttable presumption of misjoinder where the parties were in a single capacity in the original action and the claim was transferred from another court to another court having concurrent jurisdiction. For purposes of rebutting the presumption, the court held that the plaintiff must show that: (1) the complaint was transferred within ten days of the filing of the answer or other responsive pleading; (2) the defendant is not in the same capacity; (3) the defendant was not notified of the action within 20 days of the transfer; and (4) the action is within the same court in which the defendant is sued. In the current case, there was a transfer of venue of the action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406 and § 1404. As such, Rule 20(a) is effectively "inapplicable to such transfer." In the current case, the cause of action was transferred from c6a93da74d
