A welterweight clash between Akihiro Kondo and Misaki Takayama is set to headline the Sengoku X event next month in the Sumo Hall, May 12, and both fighters are in excellent shape and each has a strong reason to be confident. Kondo (24-4-1) looks to continue his current winning streak, which has seen him knock out Shinya Aoki, Hisashi Amagasa, Takanori Gomi and Masahiro Oishi, while Takayama (13-0) has already demonstrated his toughness in defeating Hayato Sakuma and Shintaro Ishiwatari. Kondo is 2-0 under the Sengoku banner, with victories over Gomi, Oishi and Ishiwatari, and for the last four years Takayama has been unbeaten in his professional career, and he takes on his first Japanese opponent. While Kondo has his streak of six straight wins, Takayama's is equally long, and the Tokyo-based fighter can't be called a fan favorite due to his Japanese background and his lack of any big-name wins on the world stage, but he does have some big wins to his name. Takayama is undefeated in his last four fights, but a tough encounter with a legend like Kondo will be his toughest test to date. Kondo gets the edge in the experience and experience of his opponent, but the odds-on favorite in the fight is the younger Takayama, with him being in the prime of his career. Kondo will look to try and avoid a difficult fight, while Takayama will be happy to put on a good show and avoid a professional death match. An all-Chinese fight between popular Sengoku lightweight "King Kong" Naoya Ogawa (17-2) and Shanghai's "Mandatory" Duan Zhongrong (8-2-1) is one of c6a93da74d
