Its also worth noting that many of the factions, such as the United Dutch Provinces, British India, Revolutionary France, Sweden, and Prussia, have a playable Slavic-speaking minority, despite being majority Germanic. This is a surprising issue, since even in the era in which they were established, the dominance of various Germanic and Slavic cultures in Europe was easily demonstrated. And as we learn later, even the ostensible nobleman-hero of the game, Napoleon Bonaparte, was of Corsican heritage. However, in a historical context, the "Slavic" nations such as Russia, Prussia, and Poland, were of little consequence. Their populations did not reach over 20 million, their empires were readily annexed by their neighbours, and their historical experience does not seem to be represented in the game, except as a resource and a trading partner. Uniquely, a historical single nation that could topple the entire modern world, the Islamic Caliphate, was lost to history some years ago. The Caliphate, formed in 711 C.E., had an extraordinary legacy - uniting the lands of Muslim empires from Spain to Russia, and then in power for almost a millennium. Also, unlike other mid-level warlords, the ruler was usually a man. However, this Islamic Empire began falling into power struggles and invasions on multiple fronts in the late 7th century. The resulting internal conflict was one of the primary causes of the rapid decline of the Muslim world. During the last century of the 10th century, the caliphate was replaced by the Seljuk Empire in 1071, which attempted to reestablish a spiritual leader, though nominally an independent entity.
