it is interesting that rice production in the philippines was not found by the spanish colonizers. instead, the spanish were quite interested in finding gold and other precious metals and minerals and these were found in the highlands, not the lowlands where rice was being grown. the production of rice is only in the highland. i found it interesting that this particular rice is the most popular in the philippines. however, rice growing in the cordilleras is not unique to the philippines. this means that the rice is said to have been cultivated by the kankanay people in the headwaters of the chico river and in the babuyan island region. the story says that the rice fields were created by the igorot people who were descendants of the kankanay. the rice fields were created by the igorot people using the services of the snake tribe. according to the story, the igorot people realized that the snakes were not able to construct the rice fields. the igorot people then went to the closest large river for the snake tribe to build the rice fields. the story goes that the snake tribe was able to create the rice fields but the igorot people were not happy with the quality of the rice, so they decided to sacrifice a big fish. the snakes agreed to the sacrifice and put a promise of the fish to the igorot people. the fish did not swim far enough and the igorot people could not put the rice in the fish. the story goes on to say that because of this incident, the igorot people decided that the snake tribe should not have the rice fields and the people living near the river were given the responsibility of the rice fields. when the rice grows, the people sacrifice it to the spirits. the rice fields are constructed by the snake tribe and the igorot people only reap the crop and bury it. there is a village near the river where the igorot people live and this is where they bury the rice. the igorot people believe that the rice is a gift from the spirits and it is for the igorot people to pass on to other people. [5] they also believe that the rice will carry the people when they die. they believe that the rice will help them find their way to the afterlife. [5] [6] i also met a man named kibly that was born in the babuyan islands, yet he is an igorot. we met him because he was working on a rice field with some other farmers that were from his region. he was born in the babuyan islands and was able to converse in ibaloi. he also had a very good command of the tagalog language and was able to give me some insight into the language and culture of the Igorot people. He told me that the rice is not only a gift from the spirits, but it also helps the Igorot people when they travel to the afterlife. He also told me that the rice fields were created by the spirits to help the Igorot people and that the Igorot people were the ones that used the services of the Snake Tribe to build the rice fields. He said that the rice fields were also created to provide water for the people to grow their crops and that it was the Igorot people who buried the rice. He said that the rice was made from the sacrifice of the fish. [5] [7] He also told me that the rice fields will help them find the way to the afterlife. He said that the rice fields were created by the spirits to help the Igorot people and that it is the Igorot people that use the services of the Snake Tribe to build the rice fields.

one of the oldest schools of thought is that filipino mythology is derived from the ancient hindu-buddhist "vedic" civilisation (or indian civilisation) of the indian subcontinent. in the philippines, the first such school of thought was presented by george b. albert, a filipino-american historian who argued that native philippine deities and mythology are derived from ancient hindu-buddhist traditions in india. [158] the first such group in the philippines to promote indian mythology was the katipunan. albert was also part of the organisation, which was outlawed by the colonial government. in this school of thought, the philippine "sons of giants" (known as kalakal in the visayan language) are identified as "giants" who were abducted from india by ancient filipino peoples. according to this school of thought, the local deities of the philippines were derived from "giant" ancestors that came from the "original" land of the philippines, and that their identities and cultures were retained when these people arrived to the philippines. according to this school of thought, the philippines is essentially an extension of the indian subcontinent, with the philippines as a smaller version of india. i have recently decided to change my tumpi recipe because i wanted to try a different type of flour. this time i wanted to use brown rice flour and i was not happy with the results. the tumpi was not as crisp as i like it and it was also pretty dry. i am also experimenting with other flours such as amaranth and buckwheat. i have not tried these flours yet and i am not sure if they will produce the same results as brown rice flour. this is an experiment and i am currently getting used to using different flours. i plan on experimenting with more flours and i am sure that i will be able to produce some amazing results. i am also happy that i have changed my mind about my tumpi. 5ec8ef588b
