Continuum Director of IT Operations Is Settled Continuum's director of IT operations, Mo Ostin, is leaving the company and starting his own "IT consultancy" that will likely focus on a larger range of IT management services, according to an entry on a media blog published in February. Continuum confirmed the hiring in an email to CRM Buyer, but declined to elaborate. Ostin has been in the IT Operations field since he started out in the industry in 1988 as a database developer at Sterling Jewelers, a jewelry store in San Diego. In 1993, he moved to San Francisco and took a job at Sun Microsystems, where he managed the database used by its NeXT workstation. "It's important to me that we continue to provide the best services we can," Ostin said in an interview earlier this month. "We're a small company and we want to be a small company, and we've built our business for several years to support that." Ostin joined Continuum in July 2010 as the CIO after a stint running the cloud computing unit at Google. He was at Sun Microsystems before that, where he worked for five years as the global head of technical operations. "The problem with employees going to work for a larger company is they typically don't have the skills they need in that new environment," Ostin says. "If they stay in a company where they can grow, they can make a good career." To learn more about what organizations are doing to tackle attacks and threats we surveyed a group of 300 IT and infosec professionals to find out what their biggest IT security challenges are and what they're doing to defend against today's threats. IT pros at banks, investment houses, insurance companies, and other financial services organizations are focused on a range of issues, from peer-to-peer lending to cybersecurity to performance, agility, and compliance.
