But what features are added? It is a work in progress, going to be improved. But I'm O.K. as far as features, it's mainly for the discipline that was made through the bullet proof design. It's for every person editing work in Lightroom that you cannot afford to have lost work due to paint, retouch or video. So this 'bullet proof' design is the one against all odds. I never thought I would like that, but all the while I feel the feature are really good even if I like 'with' vs. 'out' solutions from other applications. And at the same time, the other "features" are for the eyes. That's the other one. You can check out on the features if you want to. Regards! Adobe has introduced a brand, new, project-oriented product called "Creative Cloud", which includes a free trial version of Lightroom 5.0 before you buy the full version. Of course, the Lightroom 5.0 Free Trial is only a Lightroom 5.0 with a bunch of branding and commercials. You can't actually use it as a Lightroom 5.0, it's not really a "full" Lightroom, it's just a promotional video. The free trial lasts for three months if you buy right away, for example with the CS Express Edition of Photoshop Premium or Lightroom 5.0, but you will be asked if you want to buy Lightroom 5.0. If you do, the free trial will end after three months. Who would pay for a promotional video? The "Smart Update" feature, introduced in version 5 of Photoshop, is now available to Photoshop CS5 users in version 5.0. Presently, only those images available on your desktop are capable of being automatically updated, but eventually, a broader network of images will be available via online galleries and social networking sites. In the meantime, those that work with images stored in the cloud or on mobile devices can still receive automatic updates by enabling "Automatically check for updates" in the Photoshop update preferences." It's a definite improvement, and I tested this feature out on two desktop machines, one with an XP and OS X. A Linux machine would have worked, too. I wasn't sure if the images would all immediately appear in the Smart Updates, but after three days all the images were there and the updates were automatic. It's a stroke of genius by Adobe.
